Australia will vote on Indigenous people

Australia wants to change the rules to respect Aboriginal people. People will vote about this on October 14.

Prime Minister Anthony Albanese thinks that this is a big chance. It can bring everyone together. A group of Indigenous people will talk with the government. Not all people agree with the vote. Some people say that it will help Indigenous people. But others worry that it will divide the country.

Australia has hard votes in the past. And this is an important one.

Nigeria Crisis

In Nigeria, prices go up a lot in August. Every year, the country looks at how much things cost. This is called inflation. And this time, it is really high at 25.8%. It is the highest number in 18 years. President Bola Tinubu does some things in May which make prices go up. He stops giving extra money to people and companies for petrol. He changes the way how money works between countries. This means that food and transport cost more now. And people are very upset.

Experts say that this happens because the money in Nigeria is more expensive.

Saving the Amazon

(22) A

In Brazil, there are nonprofit groups which want to save the Amazon rainforest.

But they have some problems. People take the land, and they do not have much money. It is also hard to grow the right trees and grow enough of them. Some people attack the workers. But this work can help stop climate change and save animals.

Brazil has a lot of land to grow new trees. But the country needs a lot of money for that. The government is giving less money now.

The Christmas Truce

The First World War was a trench war. On the western front there were long series of trenches, where German soldiers fought against British and French soldiers. The land between the trenches was called no man's land. Living conditions were terrible: the trenches were full of mud, rats and fleas and, often, also dead bodies.

By the end of 1914 the soldiers were exhausted.

The art of skyscrapers

A We commonly associate the idea of very tall buildings with New York, but the first skyscrapers were built in Chicago. In 1871 the Great Chicago Fire destroyed the city, and when reconstruction began, the city grew vertically: the first skyscraper, an office building with ten floors, was built there in 1885. The use of steel and the invention of the elevator contributed to the success of skyscrapers.
